COLLEGE NOTICE

DEPARTMENT OF HUMANITIES

The Humanities Programme and the Centre for the History of Science, Technology and Medicine (CHoSTM), which is at present in the Faculty of Natural Sciences, will merge into a new Department of Humanities with effect from the 1st October 2007.

The new Department will be outside the faculty structure and will report through the Pro-Rector (Education) to the Rector. It will continue to provide the current range of educational services to the College (the undergraduate Humanities Programme of language and non-language courses, the evening class programme, and the English Language Support Programme).

The Department will also develop the taught MSc programmes currently run by the Humanities Programme and CHoSTM (science communication; science media production; creative non-fiction writing; scientific, technical and medical translation with translation technology; history of science, medicine and technology; and science, technology, medicine and society) and aim to build on research undertaken in all these areas and in foreign languages.

For its first year (2007/08), the Head of Department will be Dr Nick Russell, currently Director of the Humanities Programme and of the Science Communication Group. He will then be succeeded by Professor Andrew Warwick, currently Head of CHoSTM.
